Jennie

>>> Nothing can stop her true desire

Jennie Kim (born January 16, 1996), better known by the mononym Jennie, is a South Korean singer and rapper. She debuted as a member of the girl group Blackpink in August 2016 under YG Entertainment. Jennie Kim was born in the Seoul Capital Area, South Korea on January 16, 1996, and is her family's only child.When Jennie was eight years old, she went on a trip with her family to Australia and New Zealand. While they were in New Zealand, her mother asked her if she liked the place and if she wanted to stay, Jennie replied "yes" without knowing the outcome ahead, as she was only a child. A year later, she was sent alone abroad to study at Waikowhai Intermediate School in Auckland, New Zealand and lived with a home-stay family.[5] In 2006, Jennie appeared in MBC's special documentary "English, Must Change to Survive" she spoke about her experiences in learning a new language.

She's a Social Media Maven

On April 10, 2012, a photo of Jennie was uploaded with the question, "Who's that girl?" via official blog of YG Entertainment. Her name was not revealed at the time, so she was called " Mystery Girl" and rumoured to be a potential of YG's upcoming girl group. Her photograph gained a great deal of interest from netizens for her mysterious charm and unique exotic beauty. She instantly became the most searched-after topic on numerous portal sites under the name "Mystery Girl". Information about her identity eventually was discovered through netizens' investigations. On April 13, a YG Entertainment representative verified the information and were unable to hide their surprise by stating, "The name and age are right. When she was very young, she moved abroad so we didn't believe individuals in Korea would uncover her profile with just a photo". On September 1, Jennie made her first public appearance as the lead actress in G-Dragon's music video "That XX" from his solo album, One of a Kind. Reports stated that Jennie was scheduled to debut in a girl group.

After graduating middle school she transferred to ACG Parnell College. She had heard a lot about K-pop while residing in New Zealand and managed to find a particular interest in the music of YG Entertainment. Her mother was planning to transfer her to Florida, United States at the age of 14 so she could become a lawyer or teacher, but Jennie had called her mother crying on the phone, opposing of her wishes. Jennie thought she might not be able to find work she liked residing alone in Florida, her family fully supported her decision and she moved back to South Korea. Jennie participated in an audition held by YG Entertainment that same year and performed Rihanna's "Take A Bow". She later succeeded in joining the label as a trainee. Jennie told High Cut Korea that she was so afraid of strangers and terrible at taking the initiative to be funny, that she could barely say "Hello" during her audition. Jennie initially auditioned as a vocalist, but the company thought she should be a rapper instead since she was the only trainee capable of speaking English, and most of the songs she covered included raps. She attended Cheongdam Middle School and Chungdam High School during her trainee days.

KARA WAI

"I DON'T KNOW WHAT THE FUTURE WILL BE, BUT I THINK IT WILL GET BETTER AND BETTER."

One can grow old is a very happy thing

Known to the international audience for her kung-fu roles in Shaw Brothers Studio films in the 1970s and 1980s, Kara Hui has since portrayed a wide range of roles on screen and on television with much success. She is the inaugural and a three-time recipient of Hong Kong Film Award for Best Actress. Her portrayal of a mother in the 2009 film At the End of Daybreak won her acting awards at the Hong Kong Film Awards, Hong Kong Film Critics Society Awards, Changchun Film Festival, Pacific Meridian, Asian Film Awards, and Golden Horse Awards. In following years, she went on to win multiple acting trophies throughout Asia Pacific from film roles, making her as one of the most celebrated Hong Kong actresses. On July 1, 2018, she was awarded Bronze Bauhinia Star (BBS) by the Chief Executive of Hong Kong Special Administration Region, in recognition of her contribution to Hong Kong film industry and acting performances.

Born in Shandong, China, her elder brother was Austin Wai. Her family moved to Hong Kong when she was a toddler. In her interview on Be My Guest, Wai revealed her family lost their savings due to her father's business acquaintances. Left penniless, Wai's mother, herself, and her siblings were forced to peddle goods on the streets of Hong Kong. In her early years, Hui's family resided in the poor shanty town of Rennie's Mill. She didn't keep studying since she finish primary school.

After working at nightclubs, Wai was discovered by film director Lau Kar-leung and was cast in Lau's Challenge of the Masters (1976). After that, she participated in various films of Lau in August.

SEA BIRD

What is seabird inspiration for Gakki?

"I grew up in Hokkaido and grew up very close to seabirds," Gakki said in an interview, “Seabirds are always free to fly, and I follow my dream just like seabirds. Seabirds are my spiritual representatives and part of my soul.I hope all people who pursue their dreams can be as free as sea birds. I also hope that the spirit of seabirds will encourage more people to do what they want to do.”

THE YOUNGEST WINNER OF THE GOLDEN HORSE PRIZE

BY JENNA IGNERI OCTOBER 23, 2018

The Objects of Our Obsession. Even when I was just in elementary school, I was pretty angsty. I had trouble fitting in at school and was relentlessly made fun of by every boy I ever had a crush on (you try wearing an eye patch for three years and having the popular boy like you back—impossible). And, there were problems at home; just, you know, typical growing pains. So when I discovered Tidal, Apple's 1996 debut album, it became my escape. Immediately, I sought refuge in "Sullen Girl", a song that spoke. My fellow models and I all felt free, like we were a part of something that will not only be seen but also heard: there's a voice behind these images," Denise Bidot wrote in an op-ed for Teen Vogue about the new campaign. "The message is clear.

MY CHILDHOOD LOVE FOR FIONA APPLE HELPED ME DEAL WITH TROUBLES

While Quinn adjusts to Lawndale High effortlessly, becoming the leader of the popular girls before she even steps indoors, Daria is placed in a class for students with low self-esteem after purposely failing a psychological assessment. "We tell you over and over again that you're wonderful, and you just don't get it. What's wrong with you?" Helen says, pounding on the dinner table, when given the news Daria will have to take a class to address her low self-esteem. "Don't worry, I don't have low self-esteem. It's a mistake," Daria replies. My fellow models and I all felt free, like we were a part of something that will not only be seen but also heard: there's a voice behind these images."

A talented and versatile model

“It is now the best time for me.”

Plus-sized fashion brand Torrid constantly celebrates the beauty of body diversity through its collections. And for its New York Fashion Week show this season, the brand continued to honor its message of inclusivity and empowerment by casting a diverse array of women from all over the world to walk the runway.

We had a chance to catch up with some of the models who strutted down the catwalk and found out why the brand is so special to them.

"There are so many conditions placed on women who are put in this box, this paradigm that says, 'Within this box, is beauty, and if you're not in it, you're not beautiful,'" says one model. "And Torrid smashes that box and says, 'You know what? That's garbage. You're beautiful—your curves, your uniqueness, your differences, all of your idiosyncrasies make you who you are, and you are gorgeous just the way you are.'"

My fellow models and I all felt free, like we were a part of something that will not only be seen but also heard.

Dream start from here

GUADAGNINO: How did you feel about building this kind of emotional and psychological journey while at the same time making a genre movie?

GOTH: There were, of course, moments when it felt like we were making a horror movie, like when we were in the corridor with the holes in the ground—even filming that was terrifying. But at the end of the day, it felt like we were making a movie about characters. Those are my favorite kinds of movies, where the plots are quite small and character-driven. You were very focused on my performance. And I loved that, because you have such passion and you wear your heart on your sleeve. That made it easy to trust you, Luca.There are so many conditions placed on women who are put in this box, this paradigm that says, 'Within this box, is beauty, and if you're not in it, you're not beautiful,'" says one model. "And Torrid smashes that box and says, 'You know what? That's garbage.

Some interesting things

GUADAGNINO: To be honest, there were times when I felt like, “Oh my god, I’m pushing Mia a bit too far.”

GOTH: You pushed me probably more than any other director I’ve ever worked with. It was frustrating at times, but rewarding.

GUADAGNINO: You were so committed to having Sara be a dancer. I remember when you were training with Damien Jalet, our wonderful choreographer, how you stepped into that room. You were possessive of your role as a dancer, and in time you became one. I can’t see the difference between you and the real dancers in the movie.There are so many conditions placed on women who are put in this box, this paradigm that says, 'Within this box, is beauty, and if you're not in it, you're not beautiful,'" says one model. "And Torrid smashes that box and says, 'You know what?

Model is a serendipity

GUADAGNINO: Where are you from?

GOTH: England. I was raised there, but no. I’m still trying to figure it all out, to be completely honest. I’ve never really felt like I’m from anywhere. There are so many conditions placed on women who are put in this box, this paradigm that says, 'Within this box,

Any excuse to Celebrate Girls

Chantel Jeffries and D0uze were our DJs for the night, and of course they had the best music on blast all night. Our co-host for the evening was fashion brand Call It Spring, so, of course, we had a pop-up store—and on-site shoe customization courtesy of Faye Orlove—inside the party for attendees to check out Call It Spring's fall-winter collection when they were tired from the dance floor like usual.
